This quiet and reserved memoir is a tribute to the "good life" and the ideals of self-sufficiency, simplicity, socialism, and pacifism that Helen and Scott Nearing shared for 53 years. Helen was 24 years old in 1928 when she met Scott, a married 45-year-old economics professor who had been blacklisted by universities and publishers for his radical views.

When Helen died in 1995, at 91, her New York Times obituary called Living the Good Life and its sequel "primers for thousands of urbanites who dropped out of the corporate world in the early 1970s and headed for the quiet countryside." The Nearings have since been hailed as progenitors of both the organic-food industry and agritourism — recognition that may have left them chagrined.
